

Sandy Critchley was born in Scotland and educated in Scotland, England and France. An incurable nomad, she has moved house 33 times in her life so far but now lives in London (for the moment).

Her background is in journalism, spanning TV, radio, newspapers and Reuters. She has hunted for Natterjack toads in Cumbria for BBC Radio 4, tackled a Peruvian President about human rights abuses for TV at Reuters, delivered G&Ts to her team staking out negotiations on Nigerian debt talks and interviewed (and photographed) Fort William's first lady dog-catcher for The Scotsman. At LBC she was known on air as "The Baroness".
